NEW YEAR MEANS NEW LAWS IN LAND OF LINCOLN

Chicago Tribune

State lawmakers captured plenty of attention this year for high-profile new laws reshaping Illinois' landscape: a major income-tax increase, civil unions for same-sex couples and a death penalty ban.

But they also passed measures that didn't get as much notice, including more than 200 laws that take effect with the new year. Seeking to make good on campaign promises made in 2010, legislators were busy approving rules on everything from who must wear a seat belt and how fast big trucks can drive to the proper disposal of pharmaceutical drugs and old computers.

The General Assembly also put in place several new public safety measures, including setting up a registry to track convicted murderers after they are released from prison and requiring people who want to buy commercial-grade acids to give their names to the state, a response to attacks in 2006 and 2008 that left two Chicago women permanently disfigured.

"We had an incredible year," Senate President John Cullerton (D-Chicago) said of lawmakers' efforts. Here is a look at some of the new laws and how they might affect you.

LOST PETS

Shelters and animal control centers will be required to be more vigilant in helping reunite lost pets with owners by requiring the facilities to more carefully screen for microchips that contain identifying information.

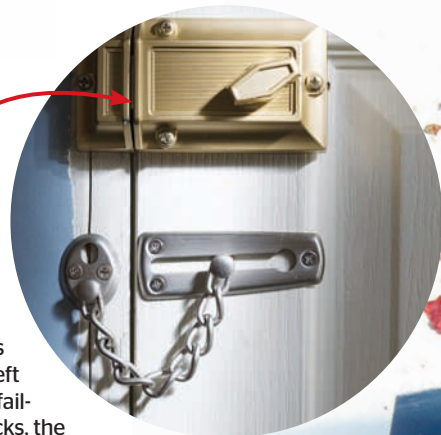

LASER POINTERS

Jail time is a possibility for someone caught pointing a laser into the cockpit of an airplane that is taking off, landing or in flight. The law is aimed at those laser pointers, which can blind pilots and put travelers at risk.

LANDLORD LOCKS

Cook County landlords will be required to change locks after a tenant moves out and before a new one moves in. If that does not happen and a theft occurs because of a failure to change the locks, the landlord can be held responsible for damages.

FAKE POT

A tougher ban on synthetic marijuana takes effect after loopholes in previous laws allowed shop owners to continue to sell the substance, which often is marketed as incense. Under the new law, it will become a felony to sell or possess fake pot. A similar ban took effect in Chicago this month.

PHOTO IDS

The Illinois secretary of state's office can now issue state identification cards that do not contain a photo of an applicant who has a religious objection to being photographed. The measure came about after Amish leaders requested the change.

SEAT BELTS

Starting Sunday, every passenger in a vehicle will be required to wear a seat belt, including those riding in the back seat. Previously, state law required only those in the front seat and those younger than 19 to strap in.

Let's even out the celebri-hate

Matt Pais

» mpais@tribune.com
» @mattpais

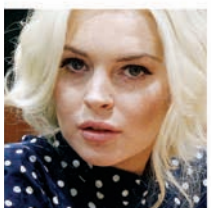

Admit it: You saw a link titled "Most hated celebs of 2011," and you didn't hesitate to click. But do all of the most-disliked pop culture figures deserve all that negativity? And does everyone who actually does deserve public scorn receive it? Let's see.

OVER-HATED Kim Kardashian

Sure, you could hate her for gaining fame from a sex tape. Or hate her for benefiting from a reality TV machine that's been out of control for years.

But really, Kardashian's not exactly the only person who's become famous largely because of her beauty—admittedly, that's a factor that prevents me from feeling negatively toward her—and her shows wouldn't be popular if people didn't watch. Blame the demand, not the supply.

OVER-HATED Lindsay Lohan

It just doesn't seem right to "hate" someone who's going through such (public) personal problems. I hated "Georgia Rule," and I hate that the media still pay so much attention to a once-promising actress who clearly wants to remain part of the conversation, but her woes are so transparent that I don't see the point of hating someone who's harming only herself.

UNDER-HATED Sarah Jessica Parker

Parker's the centerpiece of the cinematic travesty "Sex and the City 2" (as well as, of course, the also-not-very-good first movie and TV series) and, based on the recent "I Just Don't Know How She Does It," now plays every character as if she were Carrie Bradshaw—who's totally intolerable, if you ask me.

UNDER-HATED Bruno Mars

He writes catchy songs, I will give him that. But it's the blatant laziness of his lyrics that gets to me, with many songs (including "Just the Way

You Are" and "The Lazy Song") sounding like the words took three minutes to scribble down. He has to catch a grenade for "ya," not "you," making him sound as insincere as someone who thinks he wants to marry you. Either you do or you don't, man.

OVER-HATED Ashton Kutcher

He's made almost exclusively awful movies. He signed on to one of the most disturbingly popular sitcoms on TV. And it doesn't sound like he's the best pick for long-term relationship material. But gossip will be gossip, and I can't help but maintain an appreciation for Kutcher's effortless onscreen likability, his die-hard Bears fanaticism and the fact that he's actually much more intelligent and articulate than people give him credit for.

OVER-HATED Kristen Stewart

I'd never defend the "Twilight" movie series; only "Eclipse" was better than awful. But Stewart unjustly receives a lot of the blame for the films, largely because Bella's such a dopey character. In fact, the actress has developed impressively over the years (she's excellent in "Adventureland" and good in "The Runaways") while also improving her skills during interviews.

UNDER-HATED Taylor Lautner

Anyone who's seen him "acting" knows Lautner has about as much personality as a wax replica of himself. He's the epitome of someone whose looks have made him a star, but his lack of talent doesn't back it up. The guy makes basic tasks like walking and smiling look awkward.

Suspect questioned in shooting that killed 2 teens

Chicago Tribune

Chicago police on Thursday were questioning a 23-year-old suspect in the Chicago fast-food restaurant shooting that claimed two lives and left five others wounded, sources said.

Investigators also were reviewing surveillance tape from the Church's Chicken at West 66th and Halsted streets in Englewood.

Police have said that a fight broke out between two people outside the restaurant Tuesday night, and the gunman chased the other person inside the crowded restaurant and opened fire.

Killed were Jawan Ross, 16, and Dantril Brown, 17.

Ross, of the 6600 block of South Stewart Avenue, was a sophomore at Robeson High School, according to both his family and Chicago Public Schools officials. He was 6-foot-1 and loved to play basketball, his relatives said.

Brown, who lived in the 6800 block of South Emerald Avenue and attended Prosser Career Academy, hoped to get his driver's license soon and often helped his younger brother and sister with their homework, a relative said.

In addition, a 58-year-old man was wounded in the right arm, right thigh and lower right leg. A 51-year-old man was wounded in the left leg. A 22-year-old man suffered a graze wound to his right hand.

Obama to raise cash in Chicago

With the political focus on the Republican presidential nomination early next month, President Obama will return to his hometown Jan. 11 to host a series of fundraisers, Democratic campaign aides said Thursday.

Off-duty police officer killed in West Side store shooting

An off-duty police officer was fatally shot Thursday evening in a robbery at a convenience store in Austin, officials said. The shooting took place about 8:30 p.m. in the 1200 block of North Austin Boulevard, Chicago police News Affairs Officer Daniel O'Brien said. The victim later died at Stroger Hospital, police said.

4 questioned in CTA robbery

A least four people were being questioned Thursday morning in connection with a Wednesday night beating and robbery of a 20-year-old man at the Harrison Red Line Station. The robbery occurred shortly before 11 p.m. on a CTA platform in the 600 block of South State Street. TRIBUNE

Many were surprised by news of Alinea's failed health inspection a month ago. City health department officials advise consumers not to focus on whether a restaurant failed, but to examine the violations and how quickly the restaurant fixed the problem. TRIBUNE FILE

Pass-fail game

Flunking a health inspection might not be as bad as it sounds

Chicago Tribune

Close watchers of Chicago's food scene may have been surprised to learn that Alinea—one of the most highly regarded restaurants in the city and world—failed its routine health inspection a month ago.

But what may seem like a big deal turns out to be a common occurrence in Chicago restaurants, according to a Tribune analysis of newly available city data. The records show that one in five Chicago restaurant inspections during the past two years resulted in a failure.

And it doesn't just happen in dives. Of the Michelin-starred Chicago restaurants inspected—the guidebook designation is awarded to exceptional restaurants—more than one-third failed an inspection in the last two years, according to an online database launched last month as part of the city's new transparency effort.

So what does this mean? Are Chicago's restaurants especially dangerous? Not really, health officials say: Chicago restaurants don't fare much worse than those in other big cities, and no restaurant can remain open if its violations pose a threat to public safety.

"Let's put it in perspective: A fail should not necessarily scare a customer away," said Efrat Stein, spokeswoman for the Chicago Department of Public Health. It's not uncommon for any type of food business to fail an inspection whether high-end or mom-and-pop. What's important is how quickly they fix the problem."

The records posted by the health department show that most Chicago restaurants do respond to violations quickly—especially critical violations, the most serious of three categories. Restaurants that can't correct critical violations during an inspection have their licenses suspended and can't reopen until the problems are corrected.

The most common critical violations cited in health reports, Stein said, involve food temperature. At Alinea, the restaurant was written up for a potato soup measured at 51.8 degrees; the soup was cooling in an ice bath but had not reached the required 40 degrees. The restaurant was not required to close, and it passed re-inspection a week later.

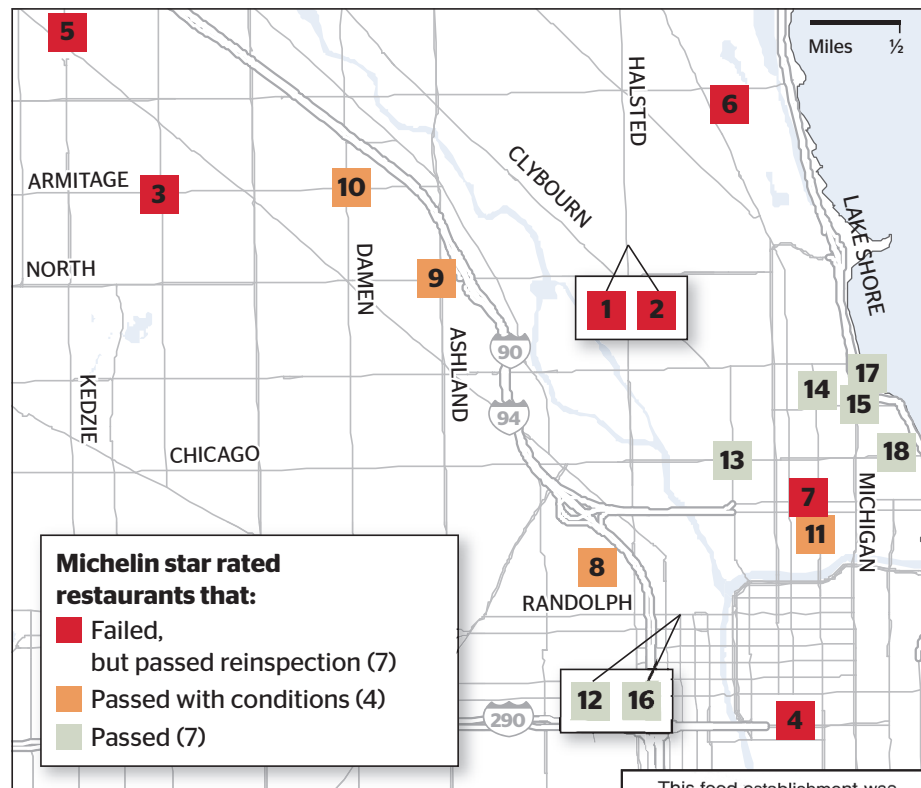

A new inspections website shares complete details of every restaurant inspection performed after January 2010 and is updated weekly. Launched in November with minimal fanfare, the website already has received more than 11,000 hits.

While some chefs agree that making more inspection information available is welcome in the interest of public safety, others fear diners may overreact.

"I can understand it, but I think it's just too much information for the public," said Giuseppe Tentori, executive chef of Boka. "They'll be scared to go to a restaurant because it got some minor violation and think, 'Oh my God, it must not be sanitary and so we should skip it.'"

EVEN AWARD WINNERS HAVE PROBLEMS

Last month the Michelin Guide announced that 18 Chicago restaurants had earned stars from the organization. More than one-third failed at least one restaurant inspection during the past two years. All seven restaurants that failed inspections passed their re-inspections.

Not inspected in the last two years: Charlie Trotters. Courtright's and Vie are outside city limits

Police issue alert after delivery robberies

Chicago Tribune

Police issued an alert Thursday morning warning South Side business owners of several robberies targeting food delivery drivers in Grand Crossing and Bronzeville.

Police said the robbers call businesses with a cellphone and order a food delivery. When the drivers arrive, they are robbed at gunpoint. So far the robbers have used the following area-code 773 cellphone numbers: 712-3426, 757-4971, 587-7674, 683-8649, 765-8423 and 936-0533.

Police cautioned drivers to call the customer first and to be suspicious of large orders where customers request change for big bills.

Anyone with information identifying the robbers should contact the Calumet Area detective division at 312-747-8273.

Good year for movies? Not so much

1 NEW YORK The curtain is falling on the worst year for Hollywood in recent memory. The movie industry sold 1.28 billion tickets in North America in 2011, according to hollywood.com, the lowest since 1995. That was good for $10.2 billion in box office revenue, down 3.5 percent from last year.

Analysts said the disappointing results came from a combination of a weak economy and expanding home entertainment options.

"Consumers are still trying to repair their balance sheets," said Miller Tabak analyst David Joyce. "It's not so much the titles." Spiking ticket prices have also played a role, said Paul Dergarabedian of hollywood.com. Average ticket prices have risen more than 80 percent since 1995, and have jumped from $6.88 to $7.96 in the past four years.

2 Two people were killed and more than 50 others injured Thursday in a 40-car pileup that shut down Interstate 10 in eastern New Orleans, authorities said. All eastbound and westbound lanes were closed following the crashes.

New rules for airline purchases

3 Airline passengers won't have to wade several steps into the booking process to see the full price of an airline ticket after a new rule goes into effect Jan. 26. The Department of Transportation rule requires airlines to include all mandatory taxes and fees in advertised fares.

Airstrike kills 35

4 A Turkish airstrike across the border with Iraq killed 35 people who now are thought to have been smuggling cigarettes, a senior Turkish lawmaker said Thursday.

Population up as ball drops

5 The U.S. population is expected to top out at close to 312.8 million people just around the time crowds gather to watch the ball drop on New Year's Eve, according to new census data released Thursday.

BATTLE FOR HORMUZ

Strategic waterway at center of Iran conflict

6 TEHRAN The Obama administration said Iran has been "saber-rattling" over its threat to block the strategically important Strait of Hormuz and renewed its vow Thursday to keep the corridor open.

But the Islamic republic's military underscored its intention Thursday to undertake whatever military maneuvers it sees fit on the waterway.

This is the latest in the recent war of words between the U.S. and Iran over the strait.

It started when Tehran's vice president this week warned that the country could block the strait if sanctions are imposed on its exports of crude oil. The U.S. Fifth Fleet, based in Bahrain, countered that "any disruption will not be tolerated."

An Obama administration official, speaking on background because of the sensitivity of the issue, said the government has been "committed to Gulf security for decades and it should come as no surprise to anyone that we'll do what we must to ensure the strait remains open."

WHAT IS THE STRAIT OF HORMUZ?

The shipping channel leads in and out of the Persian Gulf between Iran on one coast and Oman and the United Arab Emirates on the other. It is strategically important because tankers carrying oil travel through it.

Hossein Salami, deputy commander of Iran's Islamic Revolution Guards Corps, said his country "asks for no other country's permission for the implementation of its defense strategies," state-run Press TV reported Thursday.

wasn't that bad (Wasn't that bad, by the way, gets you wins against Denver, Kansas City and Seattle. Playoffs.). Five Pro Bowlers? Really? That seems

I guess it's time for some New Year's resolutions that probably won't stick. I wouldn't hold me to any of these because I'm a hypocrite.

» I resolve not to watch the Bears game Sunday or ever again until we get a new general manager and maybe a new coach who isn't comatose after every loss—and even some wins. Hey, look! Josh McCown high to me. Though Jerry Angelo's first-ever offensive Pro Bowler Matt Forte (yay!) is on IR (typical).

Cutler's coming back, but major damage has been done here. The Bears revealed themselves to everyone just how inept they are and how lucky Angelo and Lovie Smith are to have jobs. Also, Gabe Carimi. Nice karma. That's what you get for "not communicating" with Baltimore.

» I resolve to watch the Blackhawks more. No more excuses. These guys deserve our full attention. It may be the only organization that knows what it's doing. We're possibly celebrating a Stanley Cup in a few months. Let's all study up and get ready.

» The Bulls. Hmm. This is tough because it's a heartbreak waiting to happen. First, Carlos Boozer. It's called defense and you're paid to play that as well. I'm scared I'm going to get emotionally invested and they're going to lose to the Miami Heat again. I don't see how we're better than they are—yet.

» White Sox. I'm giving Robin Ventura a chance, though someone from the sports cosmos explain to me why he gets a chance and someone like Ryne Sandberg doesn't.

» Which leads me to the Cubs. The group is new, and there is a lot of work to be done. But I want to see some changes pretty quickly. Running out ground balls, everyone—that's you, Starlin Castro—paying attention at all times. All in all, 2012 won't be much different than 2011.

D-Rose is indeed a role model

Bryan Crawford

I'm not from Lake Bluff. I've never lived in Lake Bluff. I've never been to Lake Bluff.

But sight unseen, I know that Lake Bluff is a much better community to be born into, live in and grow up in. Especially when you compare it to Englewood.

That's where I'm from. That's where I lived. That's where I grew up.

As a son of Englewood, I was immediately incensed and offended by Mark Yost's column in the Tribune, "Derrick Rose is no role model."

Why?

Because Mr. Yost lives in Lake Bluff and probably would be terrified to even walk the streets of the murder capital of Chicago; the place Derrick Rose and I grew up and the community Rose was blessed to leave thanks to his God-given athletic ability.

Mr. Yost has no idea of the inherent dangers that exist in Englewood. He has no idea about the plight of the residents who live there, especially kids like Derrick who will tell you how he and his friends had pre-planned escape routes to safety just in case shootings broke out, as they so often do on the South Side.

Rose is a role model—especially to Englewood kids—because he made it out of an area that kills its sons and daughters daily and where "hope" is more likely to be a girl's name rather than a feeling that exists.

And I'm sure if given a choice, Derrick would've loved to have grown up in a cushy suburb where both parents live at home, where you can probably leave your doors unlocked and where kids can play safely and leave their bikes outside without worrying about them being stolen.

Must be nice.

What was your favorite sports moment of 2011?

Gorging myself with bourbon and hookers to celebrate Theo Epstein's hiring.

Tebowing.

The Miami Heat crying like a bunch of little Boshes.

Hawks-Nucks, Game 6, in person.

Easy. Taj Gibson dunking on Dwyane Wade.

What was the worst sports moment of 2011?

Chris Campoli's brain fart in Game 7.

Peebowing.

Sam Hurd turning the Bears season into a bad episode of "CSI: Miami." Horatio: "He'll be receiving ... 15 to 20." (Yaaah!)

"I regret that I didn't do more."

The thumb.

If you could sum up 2011 sports in one word, what would it be?

Pedophilia.

Drugs. I'm sorry did you say word or Hurd?

Lockouted.

Schadenfreude.

Typical.

What does the final Bears game of the season mean to you?

What kind of question is that? Why would you ask a question like that anyway?

No happy ending.

It means their QBs ironically get to take hikes one last time before they take hikes.

At least I get to see AP. Oh, wait.

It means goodbye to the most mismanaged crap team in the NFL. For a while.

Make a sports prediction for January.

The Packers will lose a game. Not in football, unfortunately.

The Bears will be hibernating.

I will make a resolution to not hate LeBron. And you know how New Year's resolutions go.

The Saints beat the Pack in the NFC title game. Then get Tebowed in SB XLVI.

Packers win it all. That's actually a February prediction.

PUNK'D + DUNN'KED

The votes have been cast—meet your 2011 Chicago sports studs and duds

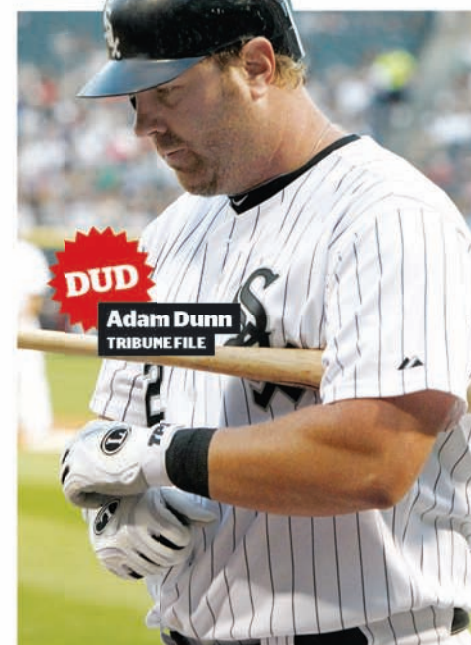

RedEye

A champion beat the champions while the strikeout king became king of the hill in Chicago sports Thursday.

Otherwise known as WWE Superstar CM Punk and White Sox designated hitter Adam Dunn, the two were crowned Chicago sports stud (Punk) and dud (Dunn) in RedEye's annual look back at the year in sports.

How did they get here? Try to follow along. Punk, a Chicago native, became the WWE champion in a match at Allstate Arena over the summer, not long after he seemingly went off-script with a rant about WWE owner Vince McMahon. It was the talk of the wrestling world for several weeks.

Punk enlisted his legion of fans on Twitter, and they responded, giving him more than 90 percent of the votes cast. He fended off a throng of Chicago Bandits fans, who voted en masse for the National Pro Fast-pitch champion team.

Dunn was a runaway winner too. Or would that be loser? In any case, he was the clear choice for dud of the year. The Sox designated hitter often was a designated "out" for the opposition, batting .159 with just 11 homers this past season. Oh, he also set a Sox record with 177 strikeouts.

Congratulations, fellas. Er, fella.

Jordan gets another ring

Bulls legend and current Charlotte Bobcats owner Michael Jordan is getting married again. A Jordan spokeswoman confirmed a WCNC-TV report that His Airness proposed to longtime girlfriend Yvette Prieto on Sunday. The marriage will be Jordan's second. But he's still No. 1 in Bulls fans' hearts.

Where's the beef?

No, what you are about to read is not a gag from a "Simpsons" episode or a "Saturday Night Live" skit. Oregon tackle Mark Asper really saved a man choking on a piece of meat Wednesday at an event at Lawry's linked to the Beef Bowl. Asper performed the Heimlich maneuver on the man. Asper told the Los Angeles Times "a big piece of Lawry's beef" came out of the man's mouth. Thanks for the image, Mark.

BEST
EVER?DO THESE MIRACLE CURES ACTUALLY
WORK? REDEYE PUTS 5 TO THE TEST

By Emily Van Zandt

REDEYE

If New Year's Eve is the biggest party night of the year, then New Year's Day can readily be described as one huge hangover.

To keep from ringing in 2012 with a ringing headache, nausea, dizziness, dry mouth and a general sense of regret, people will try almost anything. From spicy drinks to over-the-counter pills to more alcohol, aka "hair of the dog," everyone seems to have a suggestion for their favorite "cure." In early December, the FDA-regulated over-the-counter hangover pill hit the market. A combination of aspirin, caffeine and a stomach soother, the pill called Blowfish currently is available in New York City stores or online at forhangovers.com for $11 for 12 pills.

Blowfish creator Brenna Haysom says the pills stand apart as a more reliable hangover cure than simple vitamin supplements thanks to their caffeine and effervescent components, meant to help kick hangovers the morning after, rather than prevent them the night before. Although the pills are FDA regulated and made of FDA-approved components, the Blowfish pill did not go through the new drug approval process, Haysom says.

Most other hangover remedies and cures are not FDA-approved to relieve the symptoms of a hangover, and little research has been done to look into why certain cures may work on some people while others do nothing.

"[I'm] not sure why the medical community doesn't pay more attention to hangovers," Haysom says. "Partly I think because it's an entirely preventable condition and some people believe hangovers are good because they keep people from drinking too much."

While rush-shipping on Blowfish in time for New Year's Eve madness isn't a possibility for Chicagoans, there still are plenty of rumored hangover preventers and cures available, from marketed pills to DIY vitamin combinations. But do they actually work? We decided to test five purported hangover cures against a few nights out on the town. After a few weeks of morning-after testing, here are our unscientific results. Keep in mind that every hangover is different, and prices seen here may vary by location.

BYTOX

What it is: Billed as a "hangover prevention remedy," these stick-to-your-skin patches are chock-full of vitamins to help restore balance to your dehydrated body. The package advises to wear one before heading out to drink and keep wearing it for eight hours after drinking.

Where to get it: Order online at bytox.com, $2.99 per patch

The dosage: After several rounds of beer and more than one shot of whiskey with out-of-town friends, I got back to my friend's apartment and tipsily slapped another Bytox patch on my arm for good measure. Hey, if one works, two must be great, right?

The result: The only lasting effects of this patch seemed to be the red marks left on my arms when I had to yank them off like a Band-Aid the next morning. I was squarely at home in hangover city. Perhaps I should have relied less on the vitamins and paid more attention to one particular direction on the package: "Stay well hydrated."

CHASER PLUS

What it is: This over-the-counter pill contains a blend of homeopathic remedies to help ease symptoms such as noise sensitivity, nausea, headache and dry mouth.

Where to get it: Many CVS and Walgreens locations. $2 for four capsules

The dosage: Two pills after a house party overflowing with cheap beer followed by a huge glass of water.

The result: I'm not sure how ingredients like Zincum Metallicum are supposed to counter the effects of a night of drinking, but I still felt pretty nauseated the next morning. Pro tip: Avoid Old Milwaukee after midnight.

PEDIALYTE

What it is: A oral electrolyte solution marketed to parents to help children replace fluids when sick. It's not marketed as a hangover preventer, but some people swear by it.

Where to get it: The children's medicine aisle of most major pharmacies. $5.49 per bottle

The dosage: Pedialyte has been a go-to remedy for me for a few years now. When other people reach for Gatorade, I reach for this bottle. So after heading out on a Tuesday night to check out a new bar, I decided to balance the pitcher of beer I helped drink with equal parts purple-tinted liquid.

The result: Just like chugging water before bed will help you immensely the next morning, so does chugging Pedialyte. Rehydration is the only simple key to preventing hangovers so, naturally, I felt pretty good the next morning. Warning: The "unflavored" variety is just plain gross. Go grape.

ACTIVATED CHARCOAL TABLETS

What it is: Pills containing a carbon powder known for its absorption capabilities. Activated carbon often is used to keep poison from being absorbed into the body.

Where to get it: Nature's Way Activated Charcoal tablets are available in most stores. $11.25 for 100 capsules

The dosage: I had heard from a bartender friend that the best way to use these pills was to pop one prior to going out and two once I got home. After a night of BYOB sushi with friends (and four glasses of red wine), I took just one more pill after I got home.

The result: The charcoal pill seemed to make the wine have a lesser effect on me while we were at the restaurant. The next day I still felt a little fuzzy, but better than I normally would have.

VITAMIN B PILLS

What it is: These water-soluble vitamins are thought to help boost metabolism and energy, and enhance the immune system.

Where to get it: Nature's Bounty B Complex Vitamins + B12 are available at many Walgreens stores. $5.49 for 90 capsules

The dosage: A friend had a charmed interaction with vitamin B pills earlier this year, so I took her advice and took two pills along with two big glasses of water and a pain reliever after one of those "red wine dinner, followed by splitting a six pack" Saturday nights.

The result: Think of these vitamins as a boost to your best cure (aka water and painkillers). I felt more energized than I normally would after simply chugging water. But without the added water and pain killers, this remedy wouldn't have worked nearly as well.

BAR-GUMENTS

SETTLING AGE-OLD, BAR-BASED DISAGREEMENTS ONE ARGUMENT AT A TIME

When hangovers strike, the goal is simple: Rehydrate. In 2011, no drink was touted more for its miraculous hydrating abilities than coconut water. Whether you drink it plain or flavored, the beverage has been promoted in grocery stores and health stores alike, with brand Vita Coco even scoring a deal with Rihanna to be its spokeswoman. Despite its benefits, some people just can't get over the taste. Despite the name, coconut water tastes nothing like coconut and instead has a distinctive nutty, almost salty flavor. You either love the stuff or you really, really hate it.

This week: Is coconut water amazing or gross?

VS

I didn't like whiskey the first time I tried it either, but some things are an acquired taste. The slight metallic taste of coconut water didn't win me over at first sip, but the more I try it, the more I like it. In the grand scheme of rehydrating hangover cures, it's more low-cal than Pedialyte and has more electrolytes than Gatorade, and I promise you that you'll feel better within the hour. I say make a cocktail with it to quite possibly avoid the hangover altogether.

The first time I tasted coconut water, I thought the stuff I bought had gone rancid. There was just no way the drink that had been sold to me by friends as the ultimate hangover cure could taste this awful. The flavor is nothing like the sweetness you'd expect from something coming from a coconut. It tastes the way spoiled milk smells. It tastes like the water that gathers at the bottom of yogurt containers. And don't be fooled by the fruit punch-flavored varieties, either. These do nothing to mask the bite. Even holding my nose while drinking did nothing. Coconut water is, quite frankly, the worst. And the last thing my hangover needs is another reason to be nauseated.

5 spots pulling out all the stops for delicious New Year's detox

By Erin Sarris | FOR REDEYE

Whether you need some hair of the dog to ditch the headache left over from your New Year's Eve festivities or are just looking to kick off 2012 with gusto, get thy over-hung self to these spots on New Year's Day. Many are welcoming 2012 with special brunch dishes and drinks to subdue even the most stubborn hang-

OVER. ERIN SARRIS IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

Kanela Breakfast Club

3231 N. Clark St. 773-248-1622

This low-key Lakeview breakfast and lunch spot recently started stocking booze, just in time for New Year's Day brunch.

Hangover helpers: The French toast flight ($10) features bold flavors such as red velvet, lemon poppyseed and banana nut, which could very well make you forget how rotten you feel. For some protein, go for the special hangover omelet ($10) with peppered bacon, house-made turkey sausage, green and red bell peppers, cheddar, parsley, basil and a dash of Worcestershire sauce.

Hair of the dog: If it'll take more than one drink to perk you up, go for the bottomless mimosas ($20). Bloody marys made with cucumber vodka ($8) also are available.

Details: 7:30 a.m.-3:30 p.m. Reservations are recommended but walk-ins are welcome.

BLT American Brasserie

500 W. Superior St. 312-948-8744

The first day of 2012 (while most of the city is still in bed) might be the best time to check out this recently opened River North restaurant.

Hangover helpers: Brunch starts with chef Laurent Tourondel's oven-warm popovers made with black pepper and comte cheese, followed by a menu of salads, eggs, sandwiches and pizzas. Eggs piperade with chorizo, huevos rancheros and challah French toast with gingerbread spices will hit the spot as well.

Hair of the dog: If you're

Le Fleur de Lis 301 E. 43rd St. 773-266-8770

This New Orleans-inspired Bronzeville spot has a massive buffet spread planned, with a jazz band to accompany the Creole favorites at afternoon seatings.

Hangover helpers: There's not a whole lot on this comfort food-centric menu that wouldn't soothe a raging hangover, including jerk chicken, mac 'n' cheese, shrimp and grits, meatloaf and fried chicken and waffles. There's also a salad station, omelet station and dessert station with bananas Foster and beignets.

Hair of the dog: A glass of champagne or mimosa is included in the price of brunch. If that's not enough to make your hair stop hurting, try a hurricane ($5) or hit up the bloody mary bar stocked with pepperoni, hot peppers, olives, shrimp and hot sauce ($10).

Details: Three seatings take place at 11 a.m. ($10), 2 and 5 p.m. ($15; includes a turkey carving station and a live jazz band). Reservations highly recommended.

ready to go beyond the basic bloody mary ($10), try signature cocktails such as the cranberry mojito or red apple-and-bourbon fizz (all $13).

Details: 11:30 a.m.-3 p.m. Reservations and walk-ins are welcome.

Small Bar Fullerton

1415 W. Fullerton Ave. 773-525-2727

The regular menu at this Lincoln Park tavern will be jazzed up by New Year's Day specials created by chef Justin White.

Hangover helpers: Fill up on eggs Benedict with house-cured Canadian bacon ($11) or shredded corned beef hash ($12), a summer menu item that's making a special appearance for the holiday. Another surefire hangover cure is the breakfast poutine ($10) made with thin-cut fries, cheese curds, scrambled eggs, smoked beef sausage and pickled peppers.

Hair of the dog: Try drinks from the winter menu that were designed as "day after" sippers: The Elixir ($10) made with rye, yellow chartreuse, lemon and honey-chamomile syrup. The Day of the Dead #3 combines reposado tequila with lillet blanc, orange liqueur, lemon and a mist of absinthe ($11).

Details: Noon-4 p.m. Reservations recommended for large groups. Walk-ins welcome.

Prasino 1846 W. Division St. 312-878-1212

In addition to the regular brunch menu, chef Scott Halverson has coined his own holiday hangover cures at this eco-chic contemporary American spot in Wicker Park.

Hangover helpers: Entrees include the Prasino cheese steak skillet ($14) made with steak, corned beef, bacon, peppers, onion, potatoes, avocado, cheddar cheese, Monterey jack cheese and cilantro cream. Off the everyday menu, the Chef's Hangover Cure ($10) also tempts with green chili-braised pork shoulder, crispy tortilla, eggs, black beans and cotija cheese.

Hair of the dog: Snap yourself out of it with the Wake-Up Shot ($9), made with fair-trade coffee liqueur and mezcal with a chaser of sparkling wine. Or sip a bloody maria with jalapeno-flavored tequila (also $9).

Details: 8 a.m.-2 p.m. Reservations are recommended but walk-ins are welcome.

Breaking Bad

Drug kingpin Gustavo Fring (Giancarlo Esposito) caused a lot of mayhem for enemies—and friends—on the AMC drama. But Gus really went out with a bang in the season finale when he was blown up in a bomb explosion in a nursing home. The blast tears half his face off, but he still has enough sense of style to straighten his tie before collapsing.

Game of Thrones

A drunken Viserys (Harry Lloyd), who is jealous when his pregnant sister Daenerys (Emilia Clarke) becomes popular with the Dothaki tribe, pulls a sword on her and threatens to cut out her child if her husband, Khal Drogo (Jason Momoa), does not conquer the Seven Kingdoms and win him a crown. Khal responds by giving him a true “golden crown,” pouring a cauldron of molten gold on his head.

Boardwalk Empire

Gangster Jimmy Darmody (Michael Pitt) holds down a veteran of the American Indian wars who earlier had struck Darmody with a cane, as accomplice Richard Darrow (Jack Huston) scalps him.

Dexter

Dexter and Miami Metro homicide detectives discover the body of a professor who has been killed by a serial murderer staging religious slayings. The body, which is on the stage of a lecture hall, has been drained of blood. When the detectives start to investigate, they trip a booby trap that opens up a huge container above them and rains blood and guts all over them.

Sons of Anarchy

Outlaw motorcycle gang member Juice (Theo Rossi) shoots an attacker point blank in the face several times, shattering the man's skull.

The good, the blood and the ugly

Los Angeles Times

The year 2011 may have been a groundbreaker—as well as a neck-cruncher and arm-smasher—when it came to showing TV characters being offed in creative, gruesome ways. The blood flowed not only on CBS procedurals such as the “CSI: Crime Scene Investigation” franchise and “Bones,” but on prestigious series such as “Boardwalk Empire” and “Breaking Bad.” Some of the carnage was so extreme that even viewers who usually are strong of stomach found themselves covering their eyes during several of these horrific scenes. Beware, spoilers follow.

U2, Taylor Swift top 2011 North American tours list

Los Angeles Times

U2's final spate of shows on its massive "360 Tour" lands as the top-grossing tour of 2011 across North America and throughout the world, according to Pollstar, the concert-industry tracking magazine.

The group, which had to postpone a significant chunk of shows that had been scheduled in 2010 when singer Bono injured his back, roared back in 2011, pulling in $156 million from 25 shows in 21 cities in North America. Worldwide the group logged $231.9 million from 34 shows in 26 cities.

U2 was the only act to cross the $100 million mark in North America, but pop-country princess Taylor Swift came close with $97.7 million for her "Speak Now" tour, which visited 59 cities for 80 performances.

The rest of the Top 5 for the continent are country superstar Kenny Chesney, who grossed $84.6 million, Lady Gaga ($63.7 million) and the previous year's touring crown winner, Bon Jovi. The New Jersey rock band registered $57.1 million during 34 shows in 27 cities, down from $108.2 million in 2010 racked up during a more intensive year of touring that logged 51 shows in 38 cities.

Rounding out the Top 10 are Elton John ($51.8 million), Sade ($48.6 million), Kanye West and Jay-Z's "The Throne" tour ($48.3 million), Lil Wayne ($44.4 million) and Celine Dion ($41.2 million).

Overall, Pollstar's preliminary figures for the Top 25 tours showed total gross ticket revenue of $1.19 billion, down about 4 percent from the $1.24 billion tallied in 2010 in North America. Worldwide, the figures were nearly identical year to year at $2.1 billion.

"Although the overall dollar volume was down in 2011, the industry fared much better doing fewer shows and taking a more cautious approach in its objectives," Pollstar editor Gary Bongiovanni said in a statement issued along with the revenue figures. Pollstar's complete report on the Top 200 tours of the year is scheduled to be released Thursday.

Close behind U2 on the worldwide tour gross rankings was Take That, the former teen pop band from England that reunited for a hugely successful tour across the U.K. and Europe. The group, which was the springboard to fame for singer Robbie Williams, brought in $224 million from 35 shows in 17 cities.

Bon Jovi ranks third worldwide with a total gross of $148.8 million, followed by Swift at $104.2 million and former Pink Floyd singer-bassist Roger Waters at $103.6 million.

Filling out the worldwide Top 10 are John ($102.7 million), Rihanna ($90 million), Chesney ($84.6 million), Sade ($83.3 million) and Paul McCartney ($79.2 million).

MISSED CONNECTIONS | LINE OF THE WEEK

Woman for man / Red line / Wednesday

You were standing across from me, playing on your phone ... I had my red hair in a pony tail and wore orangish glasses ...

IT'S ALMOST NYE: TIME TO DUMP YOUR SEASONAL BOYFRIEND?

Q: Dear Anna,
I've been dating a guy for about a month now. We're not that compatible, and to be honest, I was mostly spending time with him to avoid the inevitable holiday loneliness. This sounds worse than it is. Who knows, maybe he's doing the same thing? So, my question is two-fold. One, since NYE is coming up, am I obligated to spend the evening with him? And two, how do you break up with someone you were only seasonally dating without making it obvious that's what you were doing?

—Blue Christmas

Anna Pulley

» redeye@tribune.com

Seasonal dating! This reminds me of working the holiday shift at Costco in high school. Meet my 20-percent-off boyfriend. He expires on Martin Luther King Day, but he came with this king-size box of Toblerone bars!

New Year's Eve is a throwaway holiday or tremendously important, depending on whom you're talking to. It is a night both despised and delighted in, representing renewal and hope—as well as exorbitant cover charges and throwing up glitter. It's a simple calendar switch, and yet, so much hype and pressure are placed on would-be revelers to have the best night EVER. If your NYE is anything less than life-changing (which it never is), then you're viewed as a personal failure somehow.

That said, the season technically ends Jan. 7, so you might as well make use of your disposable boyfriend for the midnight kiss come Dec. 31. You're not obligated, of course, but The Rule—as revealed to me by Oprah and romantic comedies—urges you to comply with this preordained obligation. Isn't this why people get into relationships in the first place? So that they are not forced to look around awkwardly at 11:59, debating the pros and cons of swapping spit with the nearest sentient being?

As for your second question, under no circumstances is it ever OK to tell someone you were merely dating them to temporarily stave off the crippling loneliness of holiday-inspired malaise. I don't care what excuse you need to make, whether it's "I want to find myself" or "I've met someone else" or "It's not you, it's Meatloaf." Come dumping time, you had better lie your ass off. You've got to be pretty good at it by now anyway. ANNA PULLEY IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

9 types of pre-exclusive relationships

The Date Report

One of the most frequently asked questions in the world of dating has got to be "If they're not your significant other, then what the hell are they?" Well, pre-exclusive relationships (or PXR) don't have to be a frustrating gray area anymore. Here's a handy guide to the nine most common types of PXRs, all converted into abbreviations for easy texting.

1. OGBC (On-Going Booty Call)

Sex and sex only. Whenever you're both down. For as long as you can remain essentially strangers. You've probably never seen your OGBC before midnight.

2. FWB (Friends With Benefits)

The most infamous of all PXRs, the FWB relationship is rarely ever as uncomplicated as either party pretends it is. The promise of a "no-strings-attached" deal with a person whom you actually enjoy hanging out with is just too sweet, though. So, we keep acting like we're emotionally invincible until we ruin a perfectly good friendship.

3. TLKNG (Talking)

"No we're not dating. We're just talking." You like each other and you both know it, but neither one of you has acted on it yet. (Having hooked up once or twice doesn't necessarily count as "acting on it.")

4. LVRS (Lovers)

"Lovers," is sort of an outdated, cheesy word that most people have only ever heard on "Murder She Wrote" ("What was your relationship to the deceased?" "We ... we were lovers."). But there's no other word that quite captures this particular relationship. LVRS are not committed to each other, but they have deep feelings for each other. For whatever reason, however, it can never be.

5. DTNG (Dating)

There's some controversy about the difference between "seeing each other" and "dating," and we won't be able to please everyone here. Dating, to me, means "going out on dates." You can be going out on dates with multiple people at one time, and there's nothing questionable about that.

6. SEO (Seeing Each Other)

"Seeing each other," means that you are involved with someone. You're not necessarily exclusive, but you're interested in the possibility. Think of it as seeing about someone. If you're "seeing someone" you can still be "dating" others. But "seeing" two people at once? That requires a conversation, at the very least.

7. XWSEX (eX With Sex)

There were probably a lot of reasons that you and your ex called it quits. But maybe the sex wasn't one of them. There's no reason that, as long as you're both single, you shouldn't be able to continue enjoying the one thing that was actually working, right? Actually, there's like a thousand reasons, but none of them seem very compelling when you're caught up in the XWSEX spell.

8. PMX (Pretty Much eXclusive)

Nobody's labeling anything at this point, but given the amount of time you're spending together, you can basically assume that neither one of you is sleeping with anyone else. That is, unless an XWSEX happens to be in town for the weekend. Or some beautiful, possibly drunk, person that you're totally never going to see again is basically throwing him/herself at you (and you're possibly drunk too). The PMX period is a time when you're basically obligated to take advantage of any and all uncomplicated sex that comes your way—because it won't last long.

GETTY IMAGES

9. SF (Significant Frother)

You're not dating them. You're not sleeping with them. But whomever you are dating or sleeping with will probably get inexplicably jealous of them. Your SF is your "When-the-hell-are-you-two-just-going-get-married?!" friend. And sometimes you think maybe you just should. There's a part of your heart that they've got on lockdown and nobody else can touch it. Think Julia Roberts and Dermot Mulroney in "My Best Friend's Wedding."

Online pirates pillage 'Fast Five' most in 2011

Los Angeles Times

"Fast Five," "The Hangover Part II" and "Thor" were the year's most pirated movies, topping a list that contained some surprising differences from the most popular movies at the box office.

The fifth, and most successful, installment in Universal Pictures' high-octane "Fast and Furious" action series, starring Vin Diesel and Paul Walker, was downloaded 9.3 million times worldwide in 2011 through the file-sharing technology BitTorrent. The data was compiled by the BitTorrent-focused website TorrentFreak.

The top 10 list for the year included several movies that did little business at the box office but were particularly popular among tech-savvy young males, including the Jake Gyllenhaal science-fiction film "Source Code" and the Zach Snyder-directed "Sucker Punch." A surprising No. 7 was the James Franco drama "127 Hours," which came out in late 2010 but gained more attention early this year due to its multiple Oscar nominations.

The year's most popular movie at the box office, "Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 2," barely sneaked onto the most pirated movie list at No. 10, having been illegally downloaded 6 million times. The No. 2 and No. 3 box office films, "Transformers: Dark of the Moon" and "The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn Part 1," didn't make the top 10 list of pirated titles.

Some good news for the Hollywood studios that have been waging a furious war on piracy—through technological means and by lobbying for anti-piracy legislation in Washington—the average number of downloads among films in the top 10 fell. Last year's most pirated movie, "Avatar," for instance, was downloaded 16.6 million times, 78 percent more than "Fast Five."

The downturn could be explained by the growing prevalence of legal ways to watch movies online, such as Netflix streaming, or by alternatives to BitTorrent for online piracy, such as sites that allow users to illegally stream video without downloading files. Or it could simply be due to the lower popularity of this year's releases.

Here are the 10 most pirated movies of 2011, along with the number of times each was down-loaded, according to TorrentFreak:

1. "Fast Five" (Universal):
9.3 MILLION

2. "The Hangover Part II" (Warner Bros. / Legendary):
8.8 MILLION

3. "Thor" (Marvel/ Paramount):
8.3 MILLION

4. "Source Code" (Summit / Vendome):
7.9 MILLION

5. "I Am Number Four" (DreamWorks / Disney):
7.7 MILLION

6. "Sucker Punch" (Warner Bros. / Legendary):
7.2 MILLION

7. "127 Hours" (Fox Searchlight):
6.9 MILLION

8. "Rango" (Paramount):
6.5 MILLION

9. "The King's Speech" (Weinstein Co.):
6.3 MILLION

10. "Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 2" (Warner Bros.):

Jeremy Renner (left) and Tom Cruise in 'Mission: Impossible—Ghost Protocol'
PARAMOUNT PICTURES

How Jeremy Renner did the 'Impossible'

Reuters

Actor Jeremy Renner scuffed around Hollywood for a decade before his career took off in 2009 when he was nominated for an Oscar in his starring role in the bomb-disposal war drama "The Hurt Locker."

Renner didn't win the award, although the film earned the best picture Oscar. He followed "Hurt Locker" with another Oscar-nominated role in "The Town" and had a cameo in this year's blockbuster "Thor."

Now he's starring opposite Tom Cruise in "Mission: Impossible—Ghost Protocol," the "MI" franchise's fourth film that is No. 1 at box offices over the holidays.

Renner, 40, spoke to Reuters about how he landed the role, working with Cruise, and rumors he may take over the franchise.

Is it true you went in to discuss a possible role in "Super 8" when you were offered "MI4" instead?

It's true. I was discussing "Super 8" with J.J. Abrams, who directed that and produced ["MI4"], and that was a very secretive project, too, and within a few hours I'd met Tom Cruise and ["MI4" director] Brad Bird. I went in for one movie and came out with another!"

Does that happen a lot?

Not to me. It's very strange. I called people and said, "You won't believe what just happened." It was crazy and I was shocked to suddenly be in "MI4." ... It's this fantastic fun franchise ... And there was no script then. They just pitched me the whole story, where my character was at, and it all made sense. It was very easy to say yes.

You play the uptight analyst. Is there much of you in him?

I can get very nervous about stuff, and I have to do something to relieve that nervousness, and Tom thought it was pretty funny and he put it in the movie. My character is complicated, and I really liked that. He starts off as this very buttoned-up desk-jockey type, and then things happen and there's more than meets the eye to him, which is always interesting.

★★★★ "An exciting bonanza of stunts and eye candy."

War Horse

★★★★ "Rather than explore the agonies of war and resilience of the bond between humans and animals and humans and humans, 'War Horse' creates a twinkly, violent legend that sometimes feels like 'Inglourious Softies.'"

We Bought A Zoo

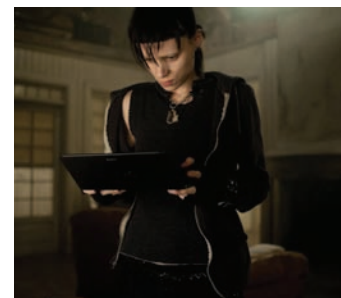

★★★★ "Packs in so much heavy-handed emotion that the sentence 'You may not leave until you get a tear in your eye!' may as well appear on the screen. And yet the PG-rated film connected with me, schmaltz and all."

MOVIE REVIEWS

The Girl with the Dragon Tattoo

★★★★ "The Swedish movie left a sleepy sensation with a nasty aftertaste; 'Tattoo' 3.0 throbs as a tale of good people wanting to right wrongs with the truth if possible, and violence if necessary."

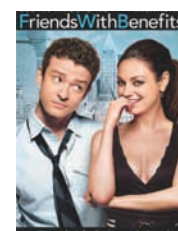

GOOD MOVIES NOW ON DVD

Warrior
The year's most underrated movie.

Margin Call
Smart financial crisis thriller.

Friends with Benefits
Kunis and Timberlake sizzle.

Another Earth
Sci-fi with a great ending.

Midnight in Paris
Sometimes sour, often lovely.

Los Angeles Times NATIONAL BOARD OF REVIEW AFI Entertainment FOX TV

"LISBETH IS A MARVELOUS POP-CULTURE CHARACTER, STRANGER AND MORE COMPLEX THAN THE AVERAGE SUPERHERO AND MORE INTRIGUING THAN THE USUAL BOY WIZARDS AND VAMPIRE BRIDES. SHE IS AN OUTLAW FEMINIST FANTASY-HEROINE!"

The New York Times x A.O. SCOTT

"THE GIRL WITH THE DRAGON TATTOO" IS A BEAUTIFULLY TAUT AND TERRIFYING THRILLER.

LISBETH SALANDER IS ONE OF THE GREAT HEROINES OF DETECTIVE FICTION, AS DIFFERENT FROM MISS MARPLE AS A TOOT OF CRANK IS TO A NICE CUP OF TEA. ON TO 'THE GIRL WHO PLAYED WITH FIRE,' PLEASE!"

They're the spa trends of 2012, dah-ling!

Reuters

NEW YORK Beauty coaching, online wellness, snow showers and sound massages are just a few of the luxury treatments clients at spas around the globe will experience in 2012.

Massages and facials still will be big draws for the $250 billion industry, but spas will branch out into more personal coaching programs, spa parties and packages for families and even online games, according to a new report.

The findings come out of the recently released SpaFinder Inc. report, which compiled the top 10 trends of 2012.

All types of coaching, whether it is beauty, sleep or wellness, are expected to be big in 2012 with spas offering coaching packages, with follow-up emails and phone conferences to support clients.

Spas also will turn down the heat with cold therapies designed to improve circulation and reduce inflammation.

Spa designer Thermarium's will launch the first-ever snow shower, according to the report. The shower's digital touch screen will enable users to choose between light snowfall, moderate snowfall or blizzard.

For an even more bone-chilling experience, there is cryotherapy—a few minutes in a frigid chamber at 184 degrees below zero wearing only a swimsuit, socks, gloves and ear and mouth protection against frostbite.

"A human can only last two to three minutes in a cryotherapy room or pod, but it's all the rage with elite athletes to help them recover from workout inflammation and pain. The Olympic rehabilitation center in Poland has a cryotherapy chamber used by sports teams from around the world," the report said.

Chaz Bono on "Dancing With the Stars." Pippa Middleton's bum on international TV. Adele kicking life's butt and taking names. There are plenty of images you'll remember from the past year, but what about the little stuff that appeared in the word bubbles? Have fun reminiscing about the ridiculousness that was 2011. 1 Kanye West, on that [bleep], from 'Bleeps' in Paris'

4 Megan (Melissa McCarthy) of 'Bridesmaids,' on a party guest

3 Charlie Sheen, on ... himself, we guess

5 Justin Timberlake

2 Rebecca Black

7 Kris Humphries, to Kim Kardashian, on life after having children

6 Simon Cowell, on potentially hooking up with Paula Abdul

1 "That [bleep] cray!"

2 "Partyin', partyin' (yeah)! Partyin', partyin' (yeah)! Fun, fun, fun, fun."

3 "Winning!"

4 "I'm glad he's single because I'm going to climb that like a tree."

5 "The only thing pot does for me is it gets me to stop thinking."

6 "Only if we came to a pact that there is zero conversation afterwards."

7 "No one will probably care about you. Let's be honest."

Secret lovers?

"They are totally dating," a source tells eonline.com. "They" would be Bradley Cooper and Zoe Saldana, though the celeb gossip site's source is "totally" secret, which means we're "totally" skeptical until we see some PDA. How 'bout it, Bradley and Zoe?

“ I don't really like the beach. I hate sharks, and the water's all whale sperm. That's why the ocean's salty.”

—One of the quotes from "Jersey Shore's" Snooki that landed her on the list of 2011's worst offenders of bad science, named by the Sense About Science campaign. Republican presidential candidate Michele Bachmann also made the list.

Share the wealth

Apparently she was just born a giver.

Lady Gaga topped dosomething.org's list of most charitable celebrities. The group lauded Gaga for her campaign against teen bullying and her contributions to AIDS/HIV research. Rounding out the top five were:

5. Leonardo DiCaprio
4. Will Smith and Jada Pinkett Smith
3. George Clooney
2. Justin Bieber

Peace out

Don't call him Kanye West. At least not until 2012. "My New Years DJ name is gone be YEEZY WORLD PEACE!" West tweeted Wednesday. And he has demands. "I'ma need a stealth bomber and 2 bottled waters," he continued. We'd expect nothing less.
